CUSTOMS DUTIES.

Important Decisions of the Attorney-General on the Subject of Bamaged Merchandise, Etc.

Washington, July 12.—The treasury department recently presented to the attorney-general for his opinion two questions arising under the act of July 14, 1870, as re-enacted in the revised statutes, under the act of March 1875, providing for an increase of dutie upon certain classes of merchandise therein specified. The first question was whether damage received during the voyage between a foreign port and the port of the first arrival by merchandise entered for immediate transportation to an interior port of destination under the above statutory provisions is to be ascertained at the port of the first arrival or at the port of destination. If at the port of destination, then whether ten days within which proof of damage is required to be lodged in the customhouse is to be computed from the landing of such merchandise at the last port. After reviewing the law, the attorney-general says that he is clearly of the opinion that the damage received during an ocean voyage by goods entered for immediate transportation, under section 2990 of the revised statutes, should be ascertained at the port of final destination. Section 2027 prohibits any allowilitary operations: The fighting on ance for damage on merchandise that has been entered unless proof to ascertain such damage shall be lodged in the customhouse of such port where such merchandise has been landed, within ten days after the landing of such merchandise. The phrase, "Port where such merchandize has been landed," is not by its terms exclusively applicable to ports of first arrival, but may be applied to ports of destination; and in cases of merchandise entered for immediate transportation, it must be understood to signify the port of destinaion, since it is at the customhouse of that port that proof is to be used. The words "after the landing of such merchandise" must be taken to mean after landing at the port of destination. The attorney general is of opinion, therefore, that the computation of the ten days is to be made from the date of landing of merchandise at the last port. The next question submitted was whether merchandise imported into New York prior to the date of the act of March 3, 1875, but which arrived at an interior port under an immediate transportation bond after that date, is liable to the increase of duties therein provided. The attorney-general says a severe verbal construction of the statute would perhaps make merchandise thus liable, but the operation of such a construction would be to impose an increased duty upon one case of goods which arrived in a particular ship at the port of New York, and to exempt another case of the same goods, by the same ship, and arriving at the same date. This could not have been the intent of congress thus to discriminate between goods which went into the public store in New York and those which, arriving at the same date, are passed on to their final port of destination under an immediate transportation bond, a construction which would make goods in this predicament liable to increased duty. It would be unequal, severely technical and oppressive. It is a sound rule in the construction of the statute of the United States, which imposes a tax, or, rather, burden, upon the citizen; and when there may be a doubt about a true construction, to resolve the doubt in favor of the citizen, upon whom the burden is imposed. The attorney-general, therefore, decides that the goods are not liable to increased duty. These conclusions having, after due consideration, been adopted by the department, col-
